Without pausing to r lect that bullet holes probably would impair the beauty of the garment. John unlimbered his newly purchased artillery and opened fire. Lewis climbed out of the shirt, scared half to death, while the lady friend shattered the heavens with shrieks for succor.

Just Preceded Cop.

As luck would have it, Bicycle Policenan Hughlett of the second precinct was thereabouts and the shot and the shrieks brought him to the scene before John had time to retrieve the $10. In fact, he didn't even have time to grab up the shirt before the policeman was right there, and John left the place only about there, and John left the place only about two jumps ahead of the cop.

John was some sprinter, but the policeman was about half a second faster, and after taking several hurdles in the form of alley fences, John was finally cornered a couple of blocks from the start. On the way to the police station, according to Policeman Hughlett, John had little to say aside from expressing regret over the fact that he failed to make the clam man a subject for the coroner instead of a victim of nervous prostration.

The law, however, in such cases takes account of intentions as well as actual leeds, and the charge against John's name is assault with intent to kill.

the national board for the promotion of rifle practice, an official statement issued hast night by that body says that even with the free issuance of rifles and amnumition the work will be handicapped by the lack of rifle ranges.

"With the growth of cities and the increasing value of land, generally," says the statement. "rifle ranges have been swept away by the onward march of progress until there are few large ranges left in the country, thus bringing about a situation where Uncle Sam says to his citizens: "Go take this rifle and ammunition and perfect yourself in its use." But how can he do so if there are no ranges available? Therefore, unless the issue of rifles and ammunition is followed by the construction of ranges where civilians can practice, such issue will not accomplish the results desired by the government. Government ranges, where available, may be used by civilian rifle clubs and many states allow of the use of their National Guard ranges, but such ranges are few and far between. The value of land is rapptly increasing and every year that the building of ranges by the government is put off will make it much more difficult to secure appropriations for the purchase of land for this purpose.

This may be, they say, an off year and for some reason the fish did not follow their usual habits of moving slowly up the coast, starting in Florida waters in January and gradually coming north, until in the middle or latter part of April they are in the Potomac and a few weeks later in the Susquehanna and Delaware and on up the coast, until in July and August they are in New England waters. Next spring it is possible that they will reappear in numbers, but as the catch has been decreasing each season for several they are in New England waters. The wreck has been off the island for some time and was plotted on the chart, being considered a menace to navigation. Bellinger was sent with a fiying boat to look for it. He located it within fifteen minutes in quite a different position from what had been assigned to it on the chart.

It has been found that one of the features of military aviation off a hostile coast is that objects can be located with the greatest ease in the water from a flying machine, although they are totally invisible from the deck of a vessel. that some remedial legislation is necessary.

It is now proposed to have the states of Maryland and Virginia, within the bounds of which Chesapeake bay and its tributaries lie, pass laws limiting the catch, so as to allow the fish to increase properly. The matter has been taken up by the committee of the Maryland legislature and a preliminary meeting of this committee has been held. When the Virginia legislature appoints its committee it is probable that some action will be taken. The Maryland members of the committee are Senators Benson of Baltimore, Beck of Kent and Chesley of St. Marys. House members are the speaker, and the plan contemplated is to draft a set of laws that will simplify the administration of interstate fishing grounds, particularly applicable to the lower Chesapeake bay and to the Potomac river. If the two committees can agree upon measures of uniform purport these will be submitted to the next legislature of the two states for enactment.
